Model United Nations

The 3rd Annual ISP MUN entitled 'Sustain to Maintain - Working for the Future' is structured to provide our students with the opportunity to come together and improve their understanding of international issues and political affairs and discover more about Malaysia. The conference will be a unique opportunity for them to make connections from around the world and meet people from different countries and cultures.

"Model United Nations, also known as Model UN or MUN, is an extracurricular activity where students typically roleplay delegates of the United Nations and simulate UN committees [1]". This activity invites the school community to wear business attire and join a real-life committee representing a country's delegation. The objective is to debate with other countries to solve an international issue in a diplomatic manner, following the Charter of the United Nations.

The main purpose of the MUN is to allow students to develop their research, public speaking and debating skills. Additionally, delegates and the Secretariat will learn about leadership and responsibility. Delegates will fulfil their role of representing their given country by thoroughly exploring the issue being debated, while the Secretariat will focus on leading their committees and guiding the delegates' research and performance. Through these experiences, students will become prepared for real-life situations and will be able to defend their opinions based on truthful facts and evidence.

I am really grateful and happy to have taken part in this event. Having a connection with other schools around the world through ISP is an incredible tool that students can take advantage of, and this event really showed me that. Making friends and knowing that we have this connection is a really nice thing.

Pablo - Instituto Thomas Jefferson Palomar delegate (2nd ISP MUN 2019)

What happens at an MUN?

Participants, known as delegates, are placed into committees to deal with pressing topics that are affecting the future well-being of our world. Each delegate represents the views of a country of the United Nations. Delegates are presented with their assignments in advance, along with a topic or topics that their committee will discuss. They conduct research before the conference and formulate positions to debate with their fellow delegates in the committee.

The delegates' final task during the conference is to agree on a resolution paper with all members of the committee that will need to be approved by the Under Secretary and the General Assembly.

This document will need to include an explanation and outline the actions that would need to be taken to solve the discussed issue. The final objective is to find creative, but realistic solutions for the topic.

The MUN conference encourages participants to learn and build their knowledge of current issues happening in the world around them and develop vital skills in negotiation, public speaking, problem-solving, conflict resolution, research and communication.

Below you can watch the video of last year's ISP MUN hosted by St. Jude School in Costa Rica. The event drew significant interest with 90 students from 11 schools in 4 countries taking part.

Students boost their self-confidence, being able to express their opinions and personalities in a respectful and polite atmosphere, being respected and respecting others regardless of their points of view. They enhance their public speaking and problem-solving skills. They also increase their knowledge of world issues and realise we are living in a linked world, so we have to work together.

Concha del Molino - MUN Advisor, Laude El Altillo School (2nd ISP MUN 2019).

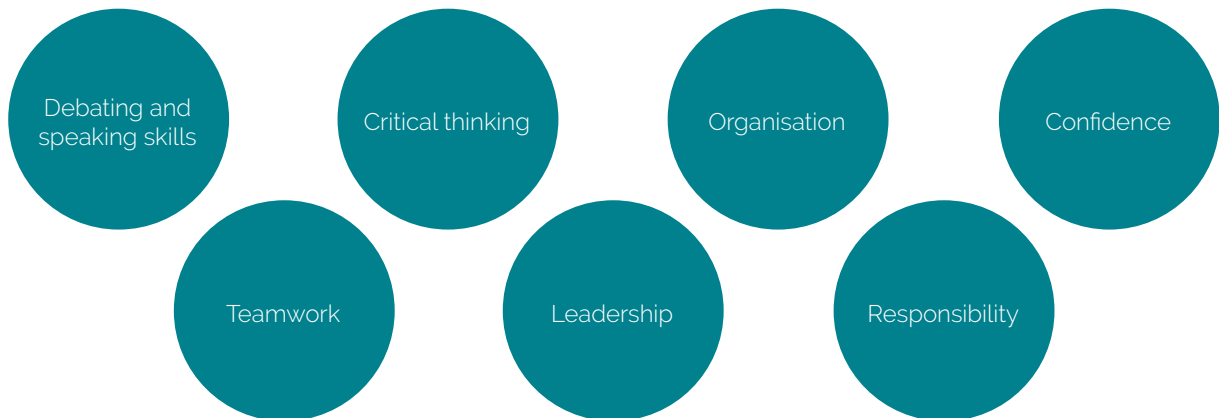

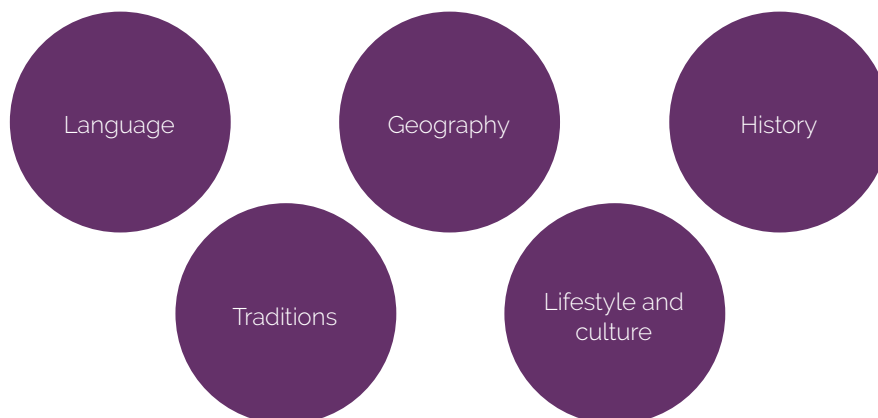

Learning Objectives
